Cornelius & Sons' Gas Fixtures in the Charter Oak Insurance Building, Hartford, Connecticut. New England has been for the past year in a state of pleasurable excitement over the approaching completion of the magnificent building of the "Charter Oak" Life Insurance Company, of Hartford; and as the thousands of travellers, both on business and pleasure, pass daily each way between New York and Boston, they are shown, with great pride, this very elegant structure, which towers far above its neighboring buildings, reminding one of the prominence which the Boston State House assumes in the views of that city, and as our own Cathedral appears as we approach Philadelphia by way of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

This stately building is of Concord granite, five stories in height, and cortains, beside the rooms used by the Charter Oak Insurance Company for their business, some seventy others, intended to be occupied as offices, etc. Some idea may be formed by our readers of its extent from the dimensions, which are as follows:-Height, 120 feet; depth, 160 feet; and front, 96 feet.

It gives us great pleasure to know that in the fitting up of this building, Philadelphia was represented by the oldest and most extensive gas-fixture manufacturers of the United States, Messrs. Cornemanufacturers of the United States, Messrs. Cornelius & Scns.

Leaving the vestibule and entering the main hall, the eye is at once attracted by the newel-post figure, "Otto of Hungary." The rotunda is lighted by a very elegant and expensive twelve-light chandelier, a combination of the French and Grecian styles. The main room, which is devoted to the business of the Charter Oak Insurance Company, is furnished with six two-light pillars and thirty-eight fine two-light brackets, fitted with argand burners, and white Cone sia es; the officers' desks in the same room are lighted by six elegant pillar lights to correspond. This room is also lighted by two large and unique newel pillars, which surmount the posts on a ther side of a grand stairway leading to the directors' room. All the fixtures in this room are from a pecial or signs made for this building. The officers' and directors' rooms are lighted by four handsome belight stioning chandellers of the Saxon-Gothic style, and four 7-light chandellers of the Grecian pattern, all having brackets to match. The second, third, fourth, and ofth stories contain very large and handsome power rooms which are occupied as offices, and fourth, and ofth stories contain very large and hand-some rooms, which are occupied as offices, and lighted by sixty very elegant chandellers, with brackets to match, all being new and original de-signs. Besides the fixtures we have thus briefly mentioned, there are many others which space will not permit us to describe.

We congratulate Messrs. Cornellus & Sons upon We congratulate Messrs. Cornelius & Sons upon their having fitted up so magnificent a building, and one which places their goods so prominently before the whole New Eggland public. To show the great demand and high estimation in which the work of Messrs. Cornelius & Sons is held, we need only say that in addition to many fine buildings, both public and private, which they have already fitted up this season, they are now engaged upon the construction of the gas fixtures for Wheeler's new opera house, Toledo, Ohio; New Saybrook Co.'s Seaside Hotel, Saybrook Point, Conn.; large new hotel at Minneapoils, Minn.; St. James' Protestant Episcopal Church, Twenty-second and Walnut streets, in this city, and "Home for the Aged and Infirm" of the M. E. Church, upon Lehigh avenue, near Broad street, Philadelphia.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

"Rank" at the Arch. Rank, the new play produced at the Arch last evening by Miss Lina Edwin's company of New York actors, treats the same theme as Robertson's Caste, and points the same moral. The object of both pieces is to demonstrate that the artificial social distinctions are of comparatively little moment in comparison with honesty, goodheartedness, and other of the virtues. The real issue is, to a great extent, evaded, but on the stage we expect to see strong contrasts, and so long as the dramatic effect is good, we care little for logic. In Caste the low birth of "Esther" was not so much of an obstacle to her reception into the aristocratic circle in which her husband moved as were her surroundings. A man in marrying a wife must accept his wife's relations, and it cannot be denied that the "Marquise de St. Maur" was to a large extent justified in objecting to "Eccles." In the play of Rank an aristocratic gentleman contracts a Scotch marriage with a low-born maiden, and all goes happily until a brother-iulaw makes his appearance in the shape of a pigstye maker, who invites himself to dine with his sister's husband, who criticizes the manners of the guests and the cut of their garments, and otherwise behaves in a manner well calculated to make the man of rank heartily sick of his bargain. Great stress is laid upon the honesty of this hawbuck, but the sympathies of many who cannot be called aristocrats could scarcely fail to enlist themselves en the side of the poor husband. The plot of the play depends upon the temptation held out to the husband to deny his marriage on account of there having been no ceremony or public recognition which would make it legal, and upon the efforts of the brother, who discovers an intention of this kind, to secure such recognition. The marriage is finally established beyond peradventure, but a separation between the husband and wife takes place. After much unhappiness on both sides they are again reunited, but with a prospect that the lady's brother, who in the meantime has contracted a taste for gin, will in the future, as in the past, prove a rather nuwelcome addition to the family circle. Rank has little of the refinement of the plot, language, or characterization that distinguishes Caste, but it is a very cleverly arranged piece, with a lively, aulmated dialogue, and with some very effective situations. It was well acted last evening, and made an exceedingly favorable impression, as it has the not too common merit of being entertaining. Miss Lina Edwin, who personated the heroine, "Doe Maynard," is a blonde of prepossessing appearance and excellent abilities both as an actress and as a singer. The performance was artistic and pleasing, and it met with much cordial applause. Mr. George Clarke, who enjoys an excellent reputation in this city, played "Miles Hubbs," the pig-stye maker, in excellent style, and Mr. Mark Bates gave a creditable persenation of "Curtis Maynard." Messrs, Harry Eytinge and Edwin Wyndham were scarcely as successful as could be desired as the representatives of a couple of British "swells," "Lord Plateglass," and "Hon. Jocelyn Raikes." Carricatures, no matter how broad, should bear some resemblance to the original model, and it is difficult to accept the personations of these gentlemen as being remarkably close copies of Jefferson as "Rip Van Winkle." Mr. Jefferson's "Rip Van Winkle" has been discussed, described, and criticized so often and from so many different points of view that it is a work of supereregation to attempt to say anything new with regard to it, and it will be sufficient if we inform our readers that Mr. Jefferson appeared last evening at the Walnut to a well filled house, and that he played with all his accustomed humor and pathos. Often as the actor has appeared in this part, it has not yet palled upon the public taste, and the per-formance last evening was greeted by the usual hearty manifestations of satisfaction and delight.

AT THE ARCH the play of Rank will be performed this evening by Lina Ed win's New York

AT THE CHESNUT Mr. E. L. Davenport will personate "Rover" in the comedy of Wild Oats, this evening. The performance will conclude with A Bull in a China Shop. AT THE MUSBUM, Ninth and Arch streets the drama of The Octoroon will be represented CITY ITEMS.
